EDITOR'S LETTER

'There was a palpable sense of determination that some called "old school activism".'

Going to conferences can be a rare privilege these days. There's no time, no money, no staff, no resources... but somehow the service user involvement conference this year soared above all this, and really rose to 'the challenge'. It helped that our speakers were amazing and each contributed something unique to the mix, using their personal experiences to innovate and inspire. Their stories of empowerment were exactly what the event was about and you can read their perspectives throughout this special conference issue.

There was a palpable sense of determination this year that some called 'old school activism'. The call to arms on naloxone distribution, started by Kevin Jaffray from the platform and continued through meetings, training and campaign films, was a well crafted initiative that garnered wide support and participation and is already leading to impressive results as delegates take the message to their home turf and join the campaign by the Naloxone Action Group (NAG).

For many other delegates the power of networking was in full force, sharing ideas, inspiration and the need to stand strong in the face of cutbacks. We also learned from the conference ourselves, here at DDN. We heard that it was useful and valued, and we'll fight for the resources to do it again.

REDUCTION IN FRONTLINE STAFF

MORE THAN HALF (53 per cent) of respondents to DrugScope's latest State of the sector survey have reported a reduction in the number of frontline staff, the charity states, with 40 per cent also reporting fewer managers and back office workers.

Based on a survey of 189 community, residential and prison services from across England, the State of the sector 2014-15 report records an average net funding reduction of 16.5 per cent – although this masked 'volatility and local variation' – following the previous State of the sector document's finding of 'no clear signs' of widespread disinvestment (DDN, March 2014, page 4). The new report also paints a picture of uncertainty around jobs and services, and de-motivated staff, with 'rapid commissioning cycles' one of the key concerns. Many respondents were worried that this could put clients at risk.

More than half of community services stated that they had been through tendering or contract renegotiation since September 2013, with a further 49 per cent expecting this to happen by September this year. The main gaps in provision identified by the report were housing support, dual diagnosis/complex needs and services for older clients, while more than 60 per cent of respondents also reported an increase in the use of volunteer 'recovery champions' and 47 per cent increased use of other volunteers.

'This is a period of far-reaching change for the services in our communities who support individuals and families affected by drug and alcohol problems,' said DrugScope chief executive Marcus Roberts. 'They are now part of a wider public health agenda, at a time when local authorities have increased discretion over their spending and are managing cuts to their budgets. It comes as no surprise that substantial disinvestment is expected and being planned for by service providers, nor that this will vary from place to place, with some areas more badly affected than others.'

The findings highlighted 'the impact of the constant cycle of local commissioning and recommissioning, which many respondents felt was disruptive to services and harmful both to clients and staff', he continued. 'Over three quarters of those surveyed were working to contracts of three years or less; one in four respondents reported that their contracts were getting shorter.' It was vital, he stressed, that 'the benefits of effective drug and alcohol treatment that have been built up over decades are not lost in the coming years'.

Meanwhile, the prime minister has commissioned the Department of Health's Prof Dame Carol Black to conduct a review into whether people with drug or alcohol problems should have their sickness benefits cut if they refuse to enter treatment. Around 100,000 people with long-term conditions such as substance problems or obesity currently claim sickness benefits, which has attracted controversy in sections of the press.

Marcus Roberts:
 'One in four respondents reported that their contracts were getting shorter.'

MARKETING AND CHILDREN

PRIMARY SCHOOL CHILDREN are more familiar with beer brands than leading makes of biscuits, crisps or ice cream, according to a new report from Alcohol Concern. Half of the children also associated 'official beer' sponsor Carlsberg with the England football team, with those who used social media sites like Facebook, Twitter and Instagram having the greatest recall of alcohol brands.

DRUG COURT ROLL OUT

THE FAMILY DRUG AND ALCOHOL COURT (FDAC) scheme is to be extended to more areas, the government has announced, including Torbay, Exeter, Plymouth and Coventry. The courts aim to keep families affected by substance misuse together, and offer fast-track treatment as well as help with issues like housing and finances.

ALCOHOL DEATHS STATIC

THE UK'S ALCOHOL-RELATED DEATH RATE remained virtually unchanged in 2013, according to figures from ONS, with a total of just under 8,500 deaths. Although Scotland saw the highest death rate, it was the only UK country where the rate was 'significantly lower' than a decade ago.

DRUG DRIVING REGULATIONS

THE GOVERNMENT'S drug driving regulations have come into force, making it illegal for someone to drive if they have a certain level of illegal drugs in their blood. Police now have the power to stop drivers and carry out a 'field impairment assessment' if they suspect them of being on drugs, which could lead to arrest and a blood or urine test at a police station. Penalties for drug driving include fines of up to £5,000 and up to six months in prison.

PHE have produced the first document of its kind from a national body.

KNOWLEDGE NEEDED

MORE needs to be done to 'identify and understand the best approaches to substance abuse prevention', according to a briefing paper from ACMD. Standalone projects are likely to have little impact unless they form part of wider healthy living strategies, says Prevention of drug and alcohol dependence, which also calls on those in the field to 'agree common terminology'.

GLOBAL FAILURE

JUST 4 PER CENT of the worldwide total of drug users living with HIV are receiving antiretroviral therapy, according to HRI's latest Global state of harm reduction report, while just 8 per cent of the world's injecting drug users are thought to be able to access opioid substitution therapy. On a 'global average', drug users are able to access just two clean needles a month, says HRI.

SCOTS LOOK TO TACKLE LEGAL HIGHS

AUTHORITIES should attach conditions relating to the sale of new psychoactive substances (NPS) when issuing public entertainment licences, according to a report from the Scottish Government's expert review group. Meanwhile, Lincoln's city council has voted in favour of introducing a public space protection order (PSPO) to stop people taking NPS in public places. Anyone breaching the order – the first of its kind in the country – could be issued with a fixed penalty notice or face a fine.

LIB DEM ELECTION PROMISE

THE LIBERAL DEMOCRAT election manifesto will pledge to replace imprisonment for possession of drugs for personal use with the approach used in Portugal, where people are diverted into treatment, education or civil penalties. The party would also transfer drug policy from the Home Office to the Department of Health, said leader Nick Clegg.

MSM ACTION PLAN

PHE has published an action plan to address health and wellbeing inequalities faced by men who have sex with men (MSM). Promoting the health and wellbeing of gay, bisexual and other men who have sex with men, the first document of its kind from a national body, looks at issues such as reducing the number of new HIV infections, rates of higher-risk drinking and 'use of harmful substances'.

LOCAL NEWS

NOTTS AWARDS HONOUR SPIRIT OF RECOVERY

THE FIRST Spirit of Recovery Awards, hosted by Double Impact, was held recently to recognise contributions to the recovery movement in Nottinghamshire.

More than 150 nominations were received across 12 categories, and were judged by a panel made up of staff from Double Impact, including three ex-service users.

The event brought together staff, volunteers, service users and people from the local community who support Nottingham's recovery community, including the Sheriff of Nottingham, councillor Jackie Norris.

KCA CYCLER IN CHARITY FUNDRAISER

NICK HICKMOTT, a substance misuse worker for KCA's young persons' service in Canterbury, will be cycling from John O'Groats to Land's End to raise money for the Oliver Fisher Special Care Baby Trust.

Hickmott, along with his former colleague Gareth Wren, will set off from Scotland on 24 July and will cycle 100 miles each day with the aim of reaching the Cornish headland ten days later.

Their challenge can be followed on Twitter while they are training and during the ride @10Days1000Miles.

NEW PROJECT TO SUPPORT OFFENDERS

A 15-MONTH PROGRAMME of workshops and coaching sessions has been launched to support service users in HMP Onley.

Beyond Recovery, in partnership with Phoenix Futures and the Northamptonshire Healthcare Trust, are offering the programme to help offenders in recovery with their decision-making abilities. Outcomes of the project will be evaluated in Autumn 2015.

Nick Hickmott and Gareth Wren plan to cycle 100 miles a day for 10 days.

SUPPORT FOR WOMEN IN SOMERSET

THE WOMEN'S ACTION GROUP (WAGS), a women-only support group, has been launched in north Somerset to offer advice on addiction to service users, their friends and family.

Drop-in sessions will offer activities such as nail care and movie viewings, along with support for vital issues including domestic violence and empowerment.

Women will also be able to talk to peers and female support workers about their addictions and recovery.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE LEADS HEP C FIGHT

ADDACTION's hepatitis C treatment project in Weston-super-Mare is being celebrated as an example of best practice in treating people with the virus.

During a discussion attended by leading health professionals and politicians in the area, it was announced that the project could be on track to eradicate hepatitis C in the region.

TREE PLANTING CELEBRATES RECOVERY

MORE THAN 2,300 native saplings were planted in Heartwood Forest, St Albans, by current and former Phoenix Futures service users to celebrate the hundreds of people who completed treatment over the past 12 months.

Phoenix Futures are working in partnership with the Woodland Trust to offer the opportunity to take part in conservation therapy through a 'Recovery through nature' programme.

Phoenix Futures will also be running workshops in the run-up to the general election to address the issues that service users face when registering to vote. The workshops will aim to help people in recovery engage with the political process.

Hannah Hassanin and Michael Scoones take part in the 'Recovery through nature' programme.

The programme combines community-based treatment with peer education, and has led to an increase in testing and treating those with a history of injecting drugs. The peer educators are former drug users who aim to offer psychological support to people before, during and after their treatment.

John Penrose MP said of the service, 'I'm proud and delighted Weston is showing the rest of the country the right way to fight and eliminate hepatitis C.'

CLUB DRUGS CLINIC SET TO OPEN

A NEW £400K PROJECT has been launched to address the harmful effects of novel psychoactive substances (NPS).

The NEPTUNE II project, funded by the Health Foundation and run by the Royal College of Psychiatrists, will build on existing research into 'club drugs' and will educate clinicians on their harms.

'Because new substances are emerging so quickly, it is very difficult to expect clinicians to identify and manage harmful symptoms of NPS use,' said NEPTUNE chair, Dr Owen Bowden-Jones. 'We hope that by giving more robust and evidence-based guidance to clinicians, we will make a real difference for patients.'

NEW CENTRE IN BLACKPOOL

CASSIOBURY COURT has opened a fully residential treatment centre in Blackpool. The 18-bed facility will also offer 12 months of aftercare.

CHALLENGING TIMES

Delegates at The challenge – getting it right for everyone heard a succession of powerful and inspiring presentations on the theme of overcoming obstacles. DDN reports

‘We’re working and living in challenging times,’ said CAROLE SHARMA of FDAP as she introduced the day’s opening session, Working with service users at all levels. ‘Today’s theme is getting it right for everybody, and that’s the important thing, whether they’re abstinent, still using or professionals. So let’s quit beefing, and get on with getting it right.’

The challenge facing LINDA CHAN from BUILD ON BELIEF (BoB) was saying goodbye to the people she’d known for 25-30 years when she stopped using drugs, she told the conference. ‘I started using at 15 and used for 32 years,’ she said. ‘The challenge wasn’t getting off drugs, but staying off. I couldn’t talk to normal people – my social skills were non-existent and I didn’t trust anybody.’

Needing a way to fill her days she decided to try volunteering, but soon came up against another challenge. ‘You had to be off your prescription and not using for two years. But then I found out about BoB, where you can volunteer even though you’re scripted.’

The effect volunteering had on her mental health was ‘amazing,’ she said. ‘With the right support and encouragement I began to realise that, even though I was still scripted, I could really make a difference. I used to believe that as a user for 32 years I had nothing to offer, but I soon learned how important it was for people to have someone advising them who’d been through the same experience.’

Helped by BoB’s policy of giving its volunteers first refusal on new vacancies, she took up a post helping to design services and workshops in west London. ‘We’re getting 35-40 people through every day now. I really wish I’d known there were places like BoB around – I could have stopped earlier with the right support and encouragement.’

BoB’s philosophy was to see recovery as ‘getting a life,’ she told delegates – ‘getting off drugs is one thing, getting a life together is an entirely different matter’ – and the majority of its volunteers were still in treatment. Another integral part of its outlook was to make sure that no one was turned away, she stressed. ‘I don’t care how many times you’ve failed at treatment – I did all of this while I was still scripted. Don’t limit yourself because of a script. If you’re stable and scripted, you can do anything you want to.’

STEVE DIXON of recovery CIC CHANGES UK described to delegates the challenge of building social capital, helping people develop independent living skills and move into long-term sustained recovery. His organisation aimed to tackle addiction, homelessness and offending, working closely with probation, prison and treatment services as well as the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP). It also tried to place peer mentors in job centres and operated an abstinence-based community rehab, he told delegates.

‘The biggest weapon you can have is a recovery community – the rest takes care of itself. If you put someone in the middle of that, they’ll be alright. You need people who’ve been where you’ve been.’

While anyone volunteering with Changes UK had access to accredited training, the organisation had been keen to set up training for people who wanted to do something outside of health, social care and the drugs field. ‘You don’t have to be a drugs worker,’ he told the conference. The organisation had joined forces with a local college to provide accredited courses, and it also aimed to provide high quality services – including a garage, café, gym and recording facilities – to the wider community.

‘The challenge is to create a sustainable revenue stream, otherwise you’re always under that cosh,’ he said. ‘We want to generate profit. That’s my dream – that we don’t need funding from anyone. Nothing that’s worth it in life is easy, but there’s always enough little moments to remind us why we do what we do.’

TONY LEE of support group REPS told the Meaningful activism session how he’d been homeless in London before moving into a hostel that had a substance misuse unit. He trained as a peer support worker then went on to become a mentor, delivering harm reduction advice on an outreach basis in Soho. ‘We were talking to people in their own community – that’s crucial,’ he stressed.

SOUNDBITES

'We know that where service users are in the lead, services are much more dynamic. The service user voice, and former service user voice, is incredibly important – let's keep hearing it. Wherever decisions are being made, you need to be there.'

ROSANNA O'CONNOR

'What saves people is peer led support. If you stick people in a recovery community they're going to be ok.'

STEVE DIXON, CHANGES UK

In 2005 he'd moved back to Fleetwood in Lancashire, setting up REPS a year later. 'Fleetwood had nothing, no community support. There was a treatment service that was run off its feet, and they didn't even know what peer support was.'

All of the organisation's activities were done without any substantial funding meaning the challenge was to be innovative and imaginative, he said, and REPS provided activities such as walking, hiking, bird-watching and fishing alongside peer support. 'We support people through community detoxes and stabilisation, and we've recently started working with people on licence from prison as well. The challenge now is to go on to become a registered charity or a CIC.'

'There's some brilliant work going on at the moment, but we do have some challenges, one of which is Ian Duncan Smith trying to time-limit OST,' said chair of session two, ANNETTE DALE-PERERA, a member of the ADVISORY COUNCIL ON THE MISUSE OF DRUGS (ACMD). Behind the scenes, Public Health England (PHE), John Strang and others had been 'trying to back these people off and get them to recognise the evidence base', she said, but Ian Duncan Smith's insistence had led to the ACMD's recovery committee being tasked with investigating the issue.

The committee had been asked to look at the evidence around whether people were being maintained on OST for longer than was necessary or desirable, and whether the evidence supported the case for a time limit. 'We gave him direct answers,' she told delegates. 'When we looked at the stats it showed that 10-15 per cent were on OST for five years or more, while 40 per cent actually left within six months and 55 per cent within a year. So the answer we gave him was that the evidence did not support bringing in time-limited OST. In fact, there's strong evidence that it leads to relapse and that acquisitive crime goes up.'

A time limit could also result in medical or legal challenges, the committee had pointed out. 'But the ACMD are concerned about the quality of OST – there are some real challenges here,' she stressed.

Other issues facing the sector, said PHE's ROSANNA O'CONNOR, were concerns over funding being lost and treatment no longer being a political priority. 'We do have a drug strategy that's a framework within which we can expect all local authorities to operate,' she said, but this was coupled with a very strong localism agenda and devolved funding and responsibilities. 'Local authorities are supposed to know what's best for the local community, and they often do. But it does mean that you have to make your voices heard with councillors and influential officers in your local authority.'

There were worries about the scale of retendering and the amount of turbulence this was causing in treatment systems, she acknowledged – 'a concern for us as much as for you' – as well as around drug-related deaths. 'Sixty per cent of these are people who hadn't been in treatment. So there's a major challenge around the attractiveness and accessibility of the treatment system, and how to reach those people outside the safety net that the system provides.'

But the biggest challenge was perhaps that where there had once been 'hundreds of millions of pounds' in the pooled treatment budget, money for treatment was now part a much larger public health grant, with the drugs part no longer ring-fenced. Nor was there any longer the 'oversight and influence' of the NTA, she said.

'What we at PHE can do is hold up a mirror to local authorities and say, "this is what's happening in your local area, and we can provide support with what you're not doing well". Some were very receptive, others less, she told delegates.

'So it needs your help alongside ours.'

THE EIGHTH NATIONAL SERVICE USER CONFERENCE

SOUNDBITES

'If you don't like where you are – do something about it!'

RICHARD MCCANN

'It doesn't cost much to do little things that make a difference'

LINDA CHAN, BOB

AGAINST THE ODDS

The day's final session saw an uplifting presentation from Richard McCann on the challenge of achieving things he'd never thought possible, and turning trauma and tragedy into triumph

Like probably a lot of you in this room, I was brought up on a council estate,' Richard McCann told delegates. He lived with his sisters, mother and father, the latter labelled a 'feckless ogre' by social services, who had placed the family on the 'at risk' register. When his father eventually left home his mother found a new boyfriend, who 'became a little bit more friendly than he should have been' with Richard's sister Sonia. Then, a week before his sixth birthday, his mother went out one evening and never came back. She'd become the first victim of 'Yorkshire Ripper' Peter Sutcliffe.

'I'm not the only person in this room who's been through challenges,' McCann told a rapt audience. 'Attitude is everything – an "I can" attitude. You take small steps, add them together, and it makes a massive difference.'

Although his grandparents had wanted to take the children in – something he only discovered years later – social services thought it would be in their best interests to place them with their father. 'He was a big drinker, very violent. When he drank whisky he became a monster. You wouldn't want to cross him.' On one occasion he drowned the family dog in the bathtub.

Inevitably, Richard went 'off the rails', he told the conference, frequently running away from home. 'You've got to do that scary stuff. You've got to face your demons. If you don't like where you are, do something about it. You can always do something about it, even if you think the odds are stacked against you. You've got to grasp those opportunities that sometimes only come around once.'

After leaving school and a couple of short-term jobs he took 'a leap of faith' and joined the army. Doing his basic training at Woolwich barracks he told people his mother had died in a car accident. 'They had no reason to disbelieve me. It was the first time nobody knew the truth about my past.' After being posted to Germany, however, a crime magazine printed the full details of his mother's murder. 'My secret was out,' he said.

'We should never be ashamed of our past... It took me years to find out that it's OK to be me.'

He went on 'a drunken rampage' around a German village and was placed in a psychiatric ward as a result. 'For the first time I was going to get some professional help. Or so I thought. They said I had a personality disorder. Sometimes we're given labels, and that's one of the easiest ones to give. You can't turn back the clock, but you can always decide how you react to stuff – whatever that stuff is for you – and what you do next.'

Deciding to 'dust myself down and start again' he returned to the UK and got a job in a warehouse. 'I was determined to make a go of it. Eventually I was told I was management material. Me?' Thriving in the job, he stayed in and saved for a deposit on a house while his friends were out drinking and taking drugs. 'I had a house, with a CID officer living next door, I got a bank loan for a car. I was bordering on middle class.' Eventually, however, a colleague persuaded him to take speed in a nightclub, 'one of the nicest feelings I've ever had'. He started taking drugs regularly, and moved on to dealing. Before long he'd lost his job and his partner, been arrested and sent to prison.

'It was horrible, it was hell. But the quality of your thoughts affects the quality of your life. I vowed to turn my life around.' On release he desperately tried to get a job, as his house was close to being repossessed, but his criminal record meant rejection after rejection. He contemplated suicide, but at his last interview before the repossession deadline, he got the job.

'I was determined to go the extra mile and be the best at it that I possibly could be.' He changed his circle of friends and – as 'one of the final things I did as part of my recovery' – he asked for some help. 'Some people think asking for help is a sign of weakness, but it's not. No one ever achieved anything without some help from somebody on the way.'

After writing a well-received book about his experiences, he decided to set up a support group for people who'd lost loved ones to murder or manslaughter. 'Sometimes when you go through something you can help other people in years to come.'

Now a very successful motivational speaker, things were 'going well', he told the conference. 'But the important thing is we've got to celebrate who we are – we're all walking miracles. We should never be ashamed of our past. Yeah, we've had some stuff happen to us but we can still turn it around. It took me years to find out that it's OK to be me. It doesn't matter what you've been through in life, what setbacks you've had, how dark those clouds have been. With the right attitude, and the right support along the way, you can achieve anything.'

"I want to train to administer Naloxone and campaign for all governments to fund this wonder drug. Addicts can recover. We do feel and we are entitled to live."

NALOXONE SAVES LIVES.

My recovery began nine years ago. I had overdosed, an ambulance was called and Naloxone was used to save my life. I guess you could say that I was a 'chaotic opioid user'. I was prone to overdose situations, often because of poly drug use. There have also been occasions in my life when I have overdosed and been left to chance and it was just sheer luck that I survived.

I know of many who have not been so lucky and some, like me, who would not be here today if Naloxone hadn't been available at that time and place. My life is full now. I am passionate about my work in advocacy, training and consultancy and I am currently in the process of relaunching our local mutual aid collective.

I am evidence that Naloxone works. Naloxone saved my life and kick started my recovery, yet it's still a postcode lottery as to who will be saved and who will be left to chance. Hundreds of people who inject drugs accidentally overdose every year and don't make it.

Like me, they could be here today.

THE EIGHTH NATIONAL SERVICE USER CONFERENCE

The day saw repeated calls for life-saving, and cost-effective, naloxone to be made more widely available. DDN reports

LET'S GET IT OUT THERE

The case for take-home naloxone is quite clear,' activist Kevin Jaffray told the morning's Naloxone – keeping up the campaign session. 'So why isn't it in the hands of the people who need it?'

While take-home naloxone programmes in Scotland and Wales had led to a fall in opioid-related fatalities, England saw a 32 per cent rise in deaths in 2013. 'That's because we have no national programme,' said Jaffray. 'It's disgraceful. I'm not saying it's a magic wand, but the fact is we could have saved at least half of these people.'

Naloxone had 'been around since 1961' he told the conference, and endorsed by the WHO, NTA and ACMD, among many others. 'This medicine saves lives,' he stated. 'So why are we still having to fight?' Many of the arguments against naloxone – that it encouraged people to take more drugs, or deterred them from seeking support – were myths, he said.

'The arguments that come up time and time again when we're campaigning in local areas are comical. Naloxone will bring people into services, not the opposite.' In fact it had the power to act as a turning point in people's lives, he stressed. 'When I OD'd and was brought back by naloxone, I accessed services. Because it scared the shit out of me.'

An overdose situation could add up to £20,000 per person in costs to the emergency services, while an overdose prevented from becoming fatal by naloxone cost around £400. 'Not only is that a £19,600 saving, you've still got a human being breathing and a family kept together,' he said. 'We want the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) to publish draft regulations on naloxone now, and we also want Public Health England to be more active in local direction around take-home naloxone programmes.'

'We have to work with what we've got,' he told the conference, which meant user activism was vital. 'You're out there on the frontline. Form naloxone action groups in your local area, get trained and pass the training on in whatever capacity you can. Lobby your local commissioning boards, MPs and health and wellbeing boards. Anywhere you can get this out there, do it.'

Take-home naloxone guidance had just been published by PHE, Rosanna O'Connor told the conference. This would act as a 'nudge to local authorities and partners' to promote wider availability in advance of the change to medicines regulations – which currently only allow naloxone to be supplied on a prescription basis – expected in October.

Meanwhile, the lunch break saw an Action on naloxone session chaired by Niamh Eastwood of Release and Mat Southwell of CoAct, looking at what could be done to challenge lack of availability. Delegates were handed a list of local authority areas that were not providing naloxone – a substantial number.

'How far is it being rolled out?' asked Niamh Eastwood. 'It looks like even in a number of areas where they're saying "yes, we're providing it" they're not doing it sufficiently.' And for those local authority areas that had stated they were not providing it, she said, 'we need to find out why. Whose decision is this? There's no reason why it shouldn't be available. It's cheap, and it saves lives.'

Release now intended to challenge non-provision through legal action, she stated. 'We need to find someone for a test case, and then what we can do is look at taking a judicial review. There's no guarantee we'll win, but it's one of the ways we can push the boundaries on this. There are very strong right-to-life and human rights arguments here. People who use drugs have been stigmatised for years. This approach of taking legal action is one way of giving people a voice again.'

The day also saw naloxone training delivered by outreach worker and activist Philippe Bonnet. 'The turnout was fantastic,' he said. 'I showed how you can train people very quickly, so those people can now go out into their communities and spread the message.'

In terms of those areas not providing naloxone, the vital thing remained perseverance, he stressed. 'Identify champions and knock down doors, and make use of the service user groups and advocacy groups that can do that on your behalf. But absolutely, don't take no for an answer. One thing's for sure – it's not rocket science.'

KEVIN JAFFRAY

'One of the reasons we've been able to bring change around naloxone internationally is because active drug users and former drug users have worked together.'

THE EIGHTH NATIONAL SERVICE

KEEP IT REAL!

The exhibition area was a vibrant bustle of networking all day as service user groups shared information on their activities. What did the experience mean to those involved?

service in a meaningful way that secured her a job and a promotion. Awesome! Richard McCann went down a storm, and he has put many of us through a speaker bootcamp that has enabled us to roll out the training for ourselves. We are now training up more people with speaker presentation skills. We also got lots of inspiration from the speakers – we liked the stories of hope, with living examples up at the front.

Tips for a creating and maintaining a group are to establish some common values and regularly refresh the leadership. We brought down 30 or so people and the vast majority were new members. Focus should be kept on where you want to go and what you want to achieve – let that define who you are, not where you have come from.

CHANGES UK

Our project started in 2007, but was set up officially as a CIC in 2009. We found the speakers inspirational – however the atmosphere was the most valuable. It was really recovery focused and our volunteers really enjoyed a well-organised day.

We networked with service user groups and peer-led organisations from all over the UK. We have since been supporting a number of start-up organisations and have joined two boards of directors.

We'd say that it's important to ensure that each service maintains a service user perspective, and regular consultation and engagement opportunities are in place to encourage and empower service users to make changes within their own communities.

SUIT

We've been going for eight years. We enjoyed all of it – but especially meeting new people and getting to network. It was a really enjoyable day, and we are definitely looking forward to next year!

HAMPSHIRE ARC (ACTIVE RECOVERY COMMUNITY)

We've been going for about a year now. Each of the presentations reminded us what valuable work we do, how much is possible, ideas for the future and filled us with the energy and enthusiasm to

RED ROSE RECOVERY

We've been running for nearly three years, however we have been independent in our own right as a charity for the last 12 months. We now employ 25 people.

The whole conference was a great experience. It's not just about the conference for us though, it's a reason to scoop lots of us together and connect and take a little bit of our magic and sprinkle it across the UK. We love the travelling down together and getting a meal the night before. The whole experience is about connecting.

This year, the guys were really buzzing on the bus going home. We loved the talk from BoB and how Linda Chan was still in treatment but able to contribute to BoB, coming through the keep going. We networked with loads of people – various service user group members as well as Public Health England reps and training providers. Our tips for other groups would be keep it fun, keep it real and keep it positive!

COACT

Mat Southwell, of CoAct, who co-chaired the lunchtime Naloxone – keeping up the campaign session, urged service user groups to lobby their local areas for naloxone provision.

'It was great to see a better balance between active drug users and people in recovery, and to see these two groups mixing together and creating a dialogue.'

The strong stream of naloxone issues was a valuable focus that led to a multi-agency peer and professional, recovery and active drug user working group.'

SPITALFIELDS COMMUNITY TRUST

The most important part of the event was getting our clients out there to meet people and realise their own value – and making a connection with a RAPT apprenticeship coordinator.

UK RECOVERY WALK

We think it's the best networking event of the year. There were lots of conversations being had after the conference because it gave everyone that opportunity to connect.

We were really impressed with the balance this year between harm reduction and recovery, and it was great to see Public Health England responding to the NAG group.

LETTERS AND COMMENT

MUCH TO BUILD ON

I want to congratulate you on what I think, was the best ever DDN conference – there was a real balance and we got a long way to the title The challenge: getting it right for everybody.

Why was it so good? Loads of reasons but I would like to pick out a few. It started with a most wonderful speaker, Linda Chan from BoB (Build On Belief), who spoke about her own life and journey and the amazing impact of being able to volunteer whilst still in treatment and on OST. I really felt it –

'People need to be supported where they are, not where services or workers think they should be..'

how she felt on walking nervously into BoB that first time, only to be welcomed and not rejected because she was on a script. This rejection of people on OST happens in many places and it is totally unhelpful and uncalled for. People need to be supported where they are, not where services or workers think they should be.

The second big success for me was the inspiring and collective passionate campaign to get naloxone in England. This reminded me of the old times – no egos, sharing all, everyone wanting to work together. People from all philosophies, strictly proud abstinence-based organisations, drug user organisations, human rights organisations and treatment services, came together to collectively fight to make naloxone more available in England.

The long awaited PHE guidance on naloxone is a helpful document but unfortunately it is only 'advice' to local authorities. Hence it doesn't name and shame or pressurise the 54 per cent of local authorities having no 'take-home naloxone' – we must do that! Naloxone is a safe and cost-effective tool to save lives and is proven not to cause people to use more drugs. There is no excuse not to offer it if we truly care about recovery and human life.

Sadly I need to remember that my enthusiasm is set in the worrying state of the sector clearly highlighted in the recent DrugScope survey, which shows that the substance misuse field is still addicted to re-commissioning. It is clear that substance misuse services are no longer protected from the reduction in public sector spending, that the sector is likely to suffer substantial disinvestment between 2014 and 2016, and that cuts in other services have also had significant impact on drug users in treatment.

But we do have ways forward and I want to share how Mat Southwell talked about how active drug users and community mobilisation were key to the early HIV response and, now, how globally active drug users and recovery drug users are working together to increase availability of naloxone. We saw that at this conference and this is what we must build on.

Finally I must say total thanks and well done to all the DDN team. I have some idea how tough the finances were this year, how many people you support to come could not get there without your help, and your total commitment to this vitally important conference.

Although I'm sort of retired can I book my place for next year?

Dr Chris Ford, clinical director, IDHDP

STEPS TO RECOVERY

With six months until the annual recovery walk, Daniel Galloway shares how his involvement was the start of a much bigger personal journey

I'M A PERSON IN RECOVERY. I've been free from using alcohol and other drugs for more than six months now. As part of maintaining my sobriety I am volunteering time to help organise the UK Recovery Walk to be hosted by Durham on 12 September.

I'm acting as secretary for the host committee, doing exciting things like typing up meeting notes, but also putting my views forward on decisions that will help shape the event. After attending the Manchester recovery walk, being filled with tears most of the day, and attending the first planning meeting, I knew I wanted to have a proactive role in the event. However, due to my experiences with alcohol and other drugs I was a shell of the person that I am today. I was full of fear and self-doubt about my ability to take on the role. I did summon the courage to put my name forward and they accepted me, especially as I could use a computer and email.

The Manchester walk was an emotional day. I was three weeks sober, and I had never seen or imagined so many people celebrating recovery. I had a fantastic day and the tears finally came out as I sang with the recovery choirs Something Inside So Strong. Seeing the crowd link arms and singing along finally led to me letting my emotions go.

Alcohol and cannabis robbed me of all my self-respect and dignity. This finally brought me to my knees and I reached a point where I had to seek help. I have slowly started to rebuild my life and see my involvement in the recovery walk as a key component in my recovery. Alongside attending the local drop-in centre and taking part in sport, I have also got involved in the fundraising and the art group sub-committees. Hopefully someone else can get that same feeling of belonging from the Durham walk that I got from the Manchester walk, and will be able to start their recovery journey.

'I have slowly started to rebuild my life and see my involvement in the recovery walk as a key component...'

It's a privilege to have the UK Recovery Walk in Durham, a small city and a relatively new recovery community. We are four months into planning the walk and things are moving on well. Having a load of people in recovery working on the project means things get done!

See you in September!

ATTENTION!

SHOULD OST BE TIME LIMITED?

In the opening session of the DDN conference, Annette Dale-Perera, a member of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, explained how the ACMD was collecting evidence about the quality of opioid substitution treatment (OST) in England. Is there any case for time limiting it, as suggested by Ian Duncan Smith?

Delegates were invited to complete questionnaires at the conference, and the time limit for responses has now been extended to allow our readers to participate.

POST-ITS FROM PRACTICE

PUT ON THE SPOT

Dr Steve Brinksman on having his preconceptions challenged

ABOUT A MONTH AGO I had a patient come in to see me and tell me what I should prescribe for them. I am generally very open to discussion with patients and agreeing a joint plan after a mutual sharing of information – at least that's how I hope it works. However on this occasion Phil took me a bit by surprise when he sat down and simply said, 'I think you need to prescribe me nalmefene'. He had been drinking around 80-90 units most weeks but always had one to two alcohol-free days a week and sometimes three to four days in a row without alcohol. There was no morning drinking and no signs of physical withdrawal, although he freely admitted craving and difficulty in controlling his use when he drank.

I also found out that he was doing a wine-tasting course with a view to working in the wine industry, so long term abstinence wasn't an appealing prospect. He agreed to see our in-house alcohol counsellor for psychosocial support, although I felt I could adequately support him with an extended brief intervention. He also agreed to keep a drink diary, and I arranged to see him again two weeks later.

When he came in he reported no reduction in his drinking so I agreed his original request to prescribe nalmefene. I reviewed him two weeks later at which point he had used the drug on seven out of the 14 days and his weekly consumption was 60 units in the first week and 45 units in the second. He was pleased with this progress and it will obviously reduce the harm if his drinking can be maintained at this level, although both he and I acknowledged that it would be better if he could reduce further.

Previously, I suspect, I would have told him he should become abstinent. And he would have probably ignored me. Because for him, abstinence simply isn't currently an option. For me, it is chastening sometimes to be put on the spot by patients and challenged to see things differently. I hope that Phil continues to do well and I hope that I will always listen to what patients feel will work for them and at least explore the options. That way, we can work together to reduce harm and improve wellbeing away from the distraction of pursuing the illusion of the 'perfect outcome'. Till the next time, anyway.

SUPPORTED HOUSING

Chris Aitken talks about how the Perry Clayman Project (PCP) is meeting the housing needs of service users in recovery

PCP BEGAN LIFE IN LUTON, Bedfordshire in 2004. Following his own struggle with addiction, Perry was admitted to treatment at a prestigious UK-based treatment centre in 2002. There he encountered 12-step based treatment for the first time, and upon leaving treatment he had a vision to provide a similar treatment programme, but at a far more affordable cost to make it accessible to a greater number of people.

Beginning with ten beds in 2004, the Luton centre grew and moved to new, larger premises in 2006. In 2009, a second facility opened in Chelmsford, followed by our Clapham service in 2011. The most recent addition to the PCP family is our 18-bed Leicester centre, which opened in September of 2014.

All of our centres are quasi-residential, meaning that treatment is carried out seven days a week from 9am to 5pm, with service users living in one of our residential properties not far from the centre itself. We encourage a family environment in the houses – coming together to cook, clean and support each other.

Following an onsite medicated detox if necessary, the 12-week primary program at PCP is rooted firmly in the 12-steps. The majority of PCP staff are in recovery themselves, meaning they can show a unique empathy and understanding in guiding others.

This then leads into the 12-week secondary programme, which incorporates a range of ‘experiential’ therapies, such as Eye Movement Desensitisation and Reprocessing (EMDR), Equine Assisted Psychotherapy (EAP) and Emotional Freedom Technique (EFT), among others.

Secondary is also the time when service users begin to look towards life after the structured environment of treatment, phasing into a greater level of independence – we set up memberships for service users with a gym, and have links with many local organisations and education providers that provide voluntary opportunities.

‘Beginning with one shared house of six beds in Luton, and driven by a lack of safe, secure abstinence based housing nationwide, PCP Housing has developed into 70 bed spaces across Luton, Leicester and Chelmsford.’

In 2012 I began working at PCP. As an ex-service user myself, and having experienced the transition from the structured environment of treatment to the often chaotic world of social housing, where substance misuse and related offending is unfortunately often rife, it occurred to me that abstinence-based supported housing would be a real benefit to those in early recovery, giving them a safe base from which to begin their journey.

This led to the founding of the charity PCP

Housing in 2013. Beginning with one shared house of six beds in Luton, and driven by a lack of safe, secure abstinence based housing nationwide, this has developed into 70 bed spaces across Luton, Leicester and Chelmsford.

Individuals have their own room and regularly scheduled one-to-one appointments with a key worker. The properties are maintained to a high standard, and there is no time limit on how long someone can stay with PCP Housing – the amount of time needed to be ready to take that next step to independence varies from person to person.

We don’t just cater to PCP treatment leavers – we also consider referrals from any service that provides a structured treatment program and feels that the person in question is in need of safe abstinence-based accommodation.

Whatever stage someone is at, be it in the madness of addiction and requiring a medical detox, addressing their compulsive substance misuse behaviours, examining the underlying causes of their addiction, or providing a stable environment in which to begin their journey of recovery in the community, we take pride in being able to offer support through every stage.

IN THE SPOTLIGHT

Sophie Sherrington came to the conference as a delegate but found herself on stage singing True Colours to rapturous applause

I CAME TO THE CONFERENCE

REPRESENTING PUSH Portsmouth recovery community and Phoenix Futures. I started my recovery journey in June 2014 with an alcohol detox in Cardiff, followed by residential rehab. It's been a very rocky road and I've struggled since leaving treatment in November, but I've been fortunate to have a massive recovery network wrapped around me who lovingly supported me through this difficult time.

I was thoroughly pleased to be given the opportunity to attend the DDN conference and I found the whole day inspiring, educational, informative and fun. When the final speaker, Richard McCann, took the stage the atmosphere was upbeat and exciting as he started to deliver his talk. I felt very engaged as I listened to his heartfelt, tragic experience. He managed to incorporate humour and kept the audience captivated throughout. It wasn't long before he started to make jokes about the colour of his hair (being ginger) and asked if there were any fellow members in the audience. I put my hand up and he said that he was going to ask six (ginger) people to join him on stage and that they would have to sing.

At the time of coming to the conference I was having some personal issues and was feeling very uncomfortable in my own skin, but the way Richard was delivering to his audience made me feel very relaxed and involved. I didn't actually think I would have to get up on stage, and when he said he was joking I felt relieved. However, ten minutes later, he turned his attention to me in the audience and invited me to join him on the stage.

'...the enormity of what I was about to do hit me... I was standing in front of about 500 strangers.'

This is when the enormity of what I was about to do hit me. I was full of fear and very nervous, but somehow I managed to suppress these feelings and when I sang I imagined that I couldn't see anyone, although it was very apparent I was standing in front of about 500 strangers. The only other time I have sung in front of people was in Cardiff's Penarth in the Park when I was in the depths of my illness. So to do this drug-free and sober and then sit through positive feedback was a little overwhelming. Yet this experience showed me that I may be able to do things I thought I could never do – it's even given me some encouragement that I may want to pursue singing at some point.

In the last four years I have been hospitalised 30 times with chronic pancreatitis, and with a heavy heroin addiction and medicated at 90mls of methadone at the time of entering treatment, I nearly lost my life. But most of all I lost my soul. Today not only do I not have to battle my addiction and risk my life finding ways to get drugs to see me through the day, but I can attend a conference on a subject which is so very close to my heart without using substances. My parents say I have that glow back and the twinkle in my eye that they never thought they would see again.

RE-EDUCATION FOR ADDICTIONS

Empowering people through education to take back their lives and break the chains of their addiction permanently

Intuitive Recovery has been operating within the North West Drug and Alcohol Treatment system for five years and over this time has gained a reputation as a leading tool in the fight against addiction. We are now commissioned by 14 DAAT's across the North West and London and this number is growing all the time.

"Truly amazing course – I still can't believe just how easy it has turned out to be. Twenty-three years using heroin is now firmly laid to rest – I can't tell you what a relief that is. If you are in two minds about sitting this course don't be – you have nothing to lose and everything to gain."
